The diagram illustrates the energy levels of a hydrogen atom. At the bottom, a dashed horizontal line represents the ground state, with a small circle labeled 'O' on the left and a black house-like shape on the right. Above this, two blue curved arrows point upwards, representing transitions. The first arrow is labeled '2S' in a red circle, and the second is labeled '2P' in a red circle. Above these, a red circle labeled '1' represents the first excited state. At the top, a red circle labeled '1A' represents the second excited state. Arrows indicate transitions from the ground state to the 2S and 2P states, and from the 2S and 2P states to the 1 state. A long arrow points from the 1 state to the 1A state. A dashed line also connects the ground state to the 1A state.
